Sound on Screen is, we believe, a genuine first that meets an untapped need in post-production. The clue is in the name: Sound on Screen is an audio library designed to be the complete sound of a screen watched by a character in your production. And starting May 2020, licensing worldwide is as easy as it is in the UK.

It might be a vintage WWII movie, a puzzle game played on an iPad, a TV game show or a sci-fi blockbuster. In each of these cases (and many more) it can currently be very time-consuming to mock up with convincing music, sound effects and dialogue, or expensive and tortuous to acquire rights for existing programming, all for a background activity. Sound on Screen makes this whole process as easy to use and cheap to license as any regular production music track.

The library launched in February 2020 and includes a hugely diverse range of audio clips. Users can register at www.sound-on-screen.com and then download the clips they need for free, choosing from a variety of mixes and stems to allow anything from a quick drag and drop placement with a TV or tablet effect already added, or stems of the music, dialogue and sound design elements for precise control in the dub. The website is designed to be self-explanatory and quick to use and browse.

The range includes movies from the 40s to present day and genres ranging from action, comedy, drama, horror, sci-fi, family and romance. There are UK and US TV shows from news and documentary through to drama, studio light entertainment, quiz shows and sports. Video games range from hand-held consoles from the 80s to modern first-person shooters, platform, role playing and world building games, some with optional YouTuber commentaries.

Music is the foundation of every clip. This might be obvious in a dramatic underscore, or something more subtle such as crowds chanting and playing in a stadium. This enables us to use the convenient licensing model of MCPS production library music, with many broadcasters already covered under a blanket agreement and other productions familiar with the process. UK clients acquire a license through the MCPS/PRS, non-UK (including the EU and USA) can now apply directly through our website, using the PRS rate cards.

Julie Hill from Media Script Checks, a UK company specialising in clearing content for film and television, comments:

We are often asked to clear footage or audio for scenes where a character is watching TV / channel hopping / listening to the radio or playing video / computer games. This can prove expensive or very difficult and protracted to clear due to the rights involved and when time is of the essence or due to budgetary constraints, simply not an option.

Sound on Screen is a one stop shop, which offers a fantastic range of audio and licensing for Film and TV is fast, straightforward and the same as for regular Production Music.

We will definitely be recommending you to our clients!

Sound on Screen was created by experienced TV sound designer and composer Guy Rowland (BAFTA awards music chair, 2016). “I was dubbing a comedy show one day, taking forever to add all the elements in a video game that a character was playing in the background. With one eye on the clock as usual, I found myself wondering why no-one had ever made a proper library of this stuff, all ready to go”. A year later and in collaboration with other accomplished composers, actors and writers from around the world, Sound on Screen is the result.

Sound on Screen will continue to grow over the coming months and years as it becomes the natural home for putting the sound on to your character’s screen.

Brand new in May 2020: two current affairs documentaries: Insight: Covid 19 and Insight: Landlords.
